Short Summary

Public security officers in Guangzhou city, Guangdong province, held human rights lawyer Liu Shihui on October 11, 2009, for four hours after apprehending him as he and a group hiked on Baiyun Mountain, Guangzhou. Liu was wearing a t-shirt featuring quotes from former Chairman Liu Shaoqi and a 1940s Xinhua editorial, including "one-party dictatorship is a disaster." According to Liu, he told police that they were Communist Party slogans, but police said the slogans were misleading and disturbed public order. In 2009, Liu had at least two previous run-ins with authorities over the shirt, on Baiyun Mountain in July and at a Guangzhou subway station in May. Liu, a lawyer at the Jingguo Law Firm in Guangzhou, had his license suspended in 2009. According to CHRD (23 February 11), unidentified assailants beat and injured Liu on February 20, 2011, while he waited for a bus to one of the locations designated as a site for "Jasmine Revolution" protests. According to CHRCLG (16 March 11), unidentified assailants harassed Liu on the morning of February 22, 2011. CHRCLG reports he went "missing" sometime after. Information on his current whereabouts is unavailable.
